7. Time Certain

A. 1:30 pm: Dr. Ronald Rochon, President, California State University, Fullerton

Chair Morales yielded to Dr. Ronald Rochon, President, California State University, Fullerton. President Rochon welcomed students back for Spring 2026 and expressed appreciation for the return of campus activity. He reflected on a successful Fall semester despite policy-related challenges and thanked faculty and staff for their continued support of students. He acknowledged Martin Luther King Jr. Day and encouraged students to engage with Dr. King's work, emphasizing their role in advancing civility and justice. He strongly urged students to review safety protocols, remain calm, de-escalate tense situations, and prioritize personal safety. President Rochon provided updates on key initiatives, including the provost search, with three candidates visiting campus and forums scheduled for January 26, 28, and 29. He shared progress on major construction projects, including the Engineering and Computer Science Hub (completion expected Fall 2027), Landmark Hall, and Phase Five student housing. President Rochon announced a pause in SmartAccess implementation to allow for additional student input and clarified that participation is optional and intended to reduce student costs. He also outlined changes to commencement to improve safety and efficiency, with ceremonies scheduled for May 18–21. Additional announcements included Discover Fest on January 21–22 and a positive budget outlook for the CSU following communication from the Governor's office. Chair Morales opened the floor to questions.

- Quock asked how the campus is adapting to record enrollment growth and increased construction.
President Rochon responded that academic deans and the provost are ensuring sufficient access to classes. He noted the university is exploring expanded course offerings, including evening, Friday, and weekend options, particularly to better serve non-traditional students. He emphasized the need to shift toward greater convenience and access for students pursuing credentials, certificates, and micro-credentials. He added that discussions are underway to improve early awareness of graduate program offerings, with further progress expected once the new provost is in place.
- Salguero asked whether Cal State Fullerton or the CSU system is taking additional actions to protect students and maintain campus peace during uncertain political and social times.

President Rochon emphasized his commitment to listening, being present, and working collaboratively with the campus community to ensure student safety. He clarified that while he does not control federal or state policy, he will lead the campus in compliance with the law and prioritize clear, timely communication. He expressed strong trust in campus leadership, particularly Chief Frisbee, and highlighted ongoing coordination with campus safety, HR, inclusive excellence, and risk committees. He encouraged students to share ideas and concerns with campus leaders and reiterated that he and his office remain accessible, including through his chief of staff, Nina Garcia, especially for time-sensitive or urgent matters.

- Syed asked whether the Board of Trustees is discussing issues beyond the budget and whether Governor Newsom is supporting the CSU in ways other than funding. President Rochon responded that while the budget remains the primary focus, campus safety has also been a significant topic of discussion. He highlighted concerns around e-scooter and skateboard use, particularly helmet use and riding in restricted areas, and emphasized the need to build a stronger culture of safety on campus. He noted that the cabinet has discussed potential policy or honor-code approaches and the formation of a committee that would include student representatives. He encouraged students to lead by example, follow safety rules, and help advance campus-wide safety expectations.

President Rochon closed with a personal reflection on witnessing apartheid-era South Africa and the significance of freedom, autonomy, and dignity. Drawing parallels to current events in the United States, he challenged students to consider what kind of country they want to shape for future generations. He urged students to deepen their scholarship, use their education to uplift others, especially those without a voice, and act with integrity and compassion. He reaffirmed that student safety is a non-negotiable priority, expressed pride in the student body, and welcomed everyone back to Spring 2026.

B. 2:00 pm: Anthony Frisbee, Chief, University Police Department

Chair Morales yielded to Anthony Frisbee, Chief, University Police Department.

Frisbee reflected on the start of the spring semester and shared his motivation in seeing campus reenergized and students preparing for commencement. He thanked students for their efforts throughout the year and emphasized the importance of their work in reaching graduation.

He provided key safety updates for 2025, reporting over 16,000 calls for service (an 11% increase) alongside a 23% decrease in crime reports since his arrival. He attributed this progress to increased trust, holistic safety strategies, unarmed campus safety specialists, community service officers, crisis response partnerships, and student input. He also noted the department secured $1.1 million in grant funding to support safety initiatives without diverting funds from other university priorities and highlighted expanded community outreach, including 82 safety presentations and 69 engagement events. Frisbee introduced a new campus safety mobile app, developed in response to student feedback. The app provides centralized access to emergency contacts, safety resources, evacuation maps, virtual safety walks, chat and text-to-911 features, and the ability to share location information with trusted contacts. He encouraged students to download the free app, use it, and provide feedback as it continues to be enhanced.

Chair Morales opened the floor to questions.

- Salguero asked whether the Titan Safety App can automatically locate users in emergencies and whether tips can be submitted anonymously. Frisbee explained that the app is designed to protect user privacy and does not track or share location information unless the user explicitly consents during an emergency. Location data is only shared when a user activates an emergency feature and approves sharing. He added that calling 911 can still provide general location coordinates. Regarding anonymous tips, he confirmed the app was intended to allow anonymity and acknowledged a current requirement to enter a name; he stated this will be corrected so name entry becomes optional.

- Camarillo asked whether the safety app would include crime alerts and information similar to those from campus police.
Frisbee confirmed that campus safety alerts will be pushed through the app and that the app includes a crime map feature showing reported crimes on and around campus.
- Valdez asked if students who include their names in a safety report would be expected to follow up.
Chief Frisbee replied that it depends on the situation. Often, campus safety will follow up to ask for more details or to offer a meeting with safety personnel, depending on the nature of the report.
- Syed asked about the most common call for service, and aside from CSO officers and what factors contribute to the decrease in crime.
Chief Frisbee explained that the most common calls for service, aside from criminal activity, are wellness-related, with students in crisis seeking support, highlighting the importance of the campus crisis response team. In reducing crime beyond the work of CSO officers, Frisbee emphasized several factors. The tiered response system allows campus safety specialists and crisis responders to handle certain calls, freeing officers to be more visible in parking lots and structures, which deters potential offenders. Improved technology, such as enhanced security cameras, enables faster identification of criminals and prevents repeat offenses, as seen in cases of bike thefts and vandalism. Community engagement also plays a key role, with staff, students, and custodial personnel reporting suspicious activity and helping catch individuals not affiliated with the university. Frisbee stressed that maintaining safety is a collective effort that relies on visibility, technology, and active participation from the entire campus community.
- Jarvis asked about the circulation study discussed with former VP Porter, specifically inquiring whether there were any updates or insights on traffic tracking and whether it was possible to coordinate with the city, Caltrans, or the county to improve flow.
Chief Frisbee explained that Parking and Transportation, under Director Jasco, was continuing to work on such studies to monitor traffic patterns and identify opportunities to enhance both traffic flow and safety. He noted that managing traffic near a freeway-adjacent university is challenging, and while there were no new updates at the moment, he would work with Director Jasco to provide future updates on the progress and findings of these studies.
- Chair Morales asked about commencement, noting that around last year's ceremony, there had been reports of ICE activity in communities, and inquiring whether the university was preparing in advance for similar concerns this year, especially given its status as a Hispanic-serving institution.
Chief Frisbee responded that the university had been concerned about potential incidents last year, even without specific threats, and shared that the same protocols and early warning systems remain in place for this year. He explained that the team would continue monitoring activity across California and Orange County, providing real-time updates as needed. Currently, there was no indication that the university would be targeted, though the potential remains. Frisbee emphasized that the university is prepared and collaborating with leaders such as Cecil Chik, John Beisner, and Board members, and he invited any follow-up conversations for those seeking more details

10. Reports

A. College Reports

I. ARTS (Presenters: Sarah Komiya, Joshua Lopez)

Chair Morales yielded to Sarah Komiya and Joshua Lopez, Directors from the College of the Arts to present their report.

Komiya and Lopez shared updates on recent accomplishments and ongoing goals.

They highlighted Sue Kim's exhibition, on display until May 16, 2026, and Carol's exhibition, honoring the late artist, which runs through March 28. They noted that the Grand Central Art Center received another multi-year grant supporting artist residencies and community projects focused on underrepresented voices. Weekend parking improvements were also celebrated, with parking free from 5 p.m. Fridays through the weekend, and student exhibition proposals for spring 2026 had recently closed. Lopez and Komiya emphasized health-focused initiatives for students, including promoting resources to prevent repetitive strain injuries for musicians, dancers, and performers, as well as using the Performance Science Center lab to track and improve physical wellness. They also addressed ongoing work to improve ventilation in the ceramics room and invited feedback to ensure the college meets students' evolving needs.

Chair Morales opened the floor to questions.

There were no questions.

II. CBE (Presenters: Cesar Mendoza, Shay Quock)

Chair Morales yielded to Cesar Mendoza and Shay Quock, Directors from the College of Business and Economics to present their report.

Mendoza and Quock shared that the Titan Sales Competition was held on December 5 through the Sales Leadership Center, which provides students with opportunities to build real-world sales skills, professional development, and employer networking, and is open to students of all majors. They noted that the top three competitors received scholarships and that the event was sponsored and judged by Sherwin-Williams, along with support from other corporate sponsors. They also provided an update on Landmark Hall, explaining that a 20,000-square-foot, three-level facility was currently under construction and would support mentorship, training, and leadership-focused events.

They highlighted upcoming events, including Mastering Family Business Polarities on February 10, and a February 23 event led by Experian's Director of Corporate Responsibility focused on leading with purpose. They concluded by outlining goals to increase collaboration and involvement, expand awareness of academic programs and resources, improve access to job and internship opportunities, and align these efforts with college and BIC priorities to enhance the overall student experience.

Chair Morales opened the floor to questions.

- Guzman inquired about what strategies were being brainstormed to support this effort.

Quock responded that the college had been focusing on positioning itself as an active member of the broader community by strengthening relationships with employers. He explained that programs and centers such as the Sales Leadership Center played a key role by bringing in corporate sponsors and creating direct interaction between students and employers seeking to hire. He added that the college had been intentionally establishing, building, and cultivating these relationships so that employers would continue coming to the college because of the high-quality talent produced by its students.

- Romero sought clarification on who was leading these outreach efforts within the College of Business and Economics

Quock responded that Business Career Services played a central role in developing and sustaining employer relationships. He explained that student representatives had previously communicated student concerns and industry interests to the office, and that Career Services had been receptive to this feedback. He added that the team had been effective in expanding connections across different industry sectors and establishing new employer partnerships, which helped students explore and work toward careers aligned with their interests.

- Chair Morales asked whether there were any planned collaborations with Cintas or similar businesses during the semester.

Quock responded that there were no collaborations currently planned with Cintas, but he expressed interest in initiating a conversation with the company's general manager, noting their strong relationship with the university and enthusiasm for working with Cal State Fullerton students. He added that during an upcoming meeting with the dean, he intended to discuss ASI's Alumni Week and explore how existing and emerging employer relationships, particularly through Business Career Services, could be leveraged to enhance Alumni Week programming.

- Suzer asked whether there were plans to expand internship or career opportunities for first- and second-year students, noting that many companies at the internship expo primarily targeted juniors and students nearing graduation

Mendoza responded that, within the College of Business, most internships were typically designed for students after their junior year, as these roles often led to full-time offers following graduation. He acknowledged that while some opportunities existed for sophomores, the majority of recruiting focused on upper-division students and varied by industry and position. Quock added that although this remained a challenging issue, the college had taken steps to support underclassmen by bringing employers to campus to table and engage with students. He explained that these interactions provided early exposure to the business environment, allowed students to speak directly with professionals, and offered guidance on preparation, resume building, and interview skills so students would be better prepared when internship and job opportunities became available later in their academic careers.

What is TitanSafety

Titan Safety is an all-in-one mobile safety app for Cal State Fullerton's students, staff, faculty, and visitors.

It's designed to help you stay safe on and around campus with a variety of easy-to-use tools.

What are the Main Features?

- Emergency Contacts
- Emergency Blue Phone
- Mental Health
- Friend Walk
- Virtual Safety Escort
- Chat with CSUF Police
- Report a Tip
- Emergency Plans
- Support Resources
- Campus Maps
- Safety Toolbox

Scenario: Leaving Class - Flat Tire

Emergency Blue Phone Feature

Situation: Jordan leaves an evening class and finds a flat tire in a quiet parking lot. A car nearby is circling slowly, making Jordan uncomfortable.

Action: Jordan stays inside his locked car and taps Emergency Blue Phone in the Titan Safety app. The CSUF Police Department instantly receives the alert and sends a quick message: “Jordan, we see your alert. Are you safe to respond?”

Result: Jordan texts, “Flat tire. Not comfortable outside.” Officers arrive and assist Jordan without requiring a phone call or Jordan leaving the vehicle.
